Over the past 30 years, children's consumption in Britain has increased dramatically. In the average family of two parents and two children, spending on toys and children's clothing has more than tripled, and spending on sweets, ice cream and soft drinks has risen by one third. Research has recently found that spending is around £3,000 per child per year. The growth in spending reflects higher living standards, but it has been boosted by the efforts of the advertising industry. Campaigns directed straight at children account for much advertising expenditure. Most children in Britain over eight now have a television in the bedroom; on average, they watch 900 hours of TV a year, which is more than the 750 hours the average child is actually being taught in school. Thus a child could see at least 10,000 commercials a year.

29. The average family 30 years ago

- A) bought more children's clothes and books and less ice cream and candy
- B) watched more TV commercials than today
- C) had a higher living standard than today
- D) didn't have a television set
- E) spent far less on children's products

30. One reason that children's consumption in Britain has risen is that

- A) parents tend to have fewer kids now
- B) more kids are involved in advertising campaigns
- C) researchers advise parents to spend £3000 per year
- D) the living standard has risen in the country over the years
- E) children have much more money themselves nowadays

31. The author concludes that the fact that most children over eight now have their own television set means

- A) children prefer watching television to going to school
- B) children are not as healthy as they were
- C) more children are missing school in order to watch television
- D) an increasing amount of commercials are being watched by children
- E) children spend a lot of time away from their parents

More conservation money and effort has gone into saving pandas than has been spent on any other animal on Earth. They are not only the flagship animal of their habitat, but are often used as the archetypal image of endangered species. Currently, there are estimated to be only 1,600 in the wild, exclusively in the mountainous regions of central China, and about 300 in zoos and breeding centers. In the past, their range was wider, but farming, deforestation, and industrial development have driven the creatures out of lowland habitats into an exclusively mountainous terrain.

32. Which of the followings is not mentioned about pandas in the paragraph?

- A) The approximate number of pandas living in the wild and being captive
- B) The reasons why their number is diminishing
- C) The efforts to prevent pandas from becoming extinct
- D) The breeding rate of pandas
- E) Pandas are under protection

33. It can be concluded from the passage that

- A) pandas became extinct many years ago
