Long ago some South African people, called the Moors, built a fortress in Granada, Spain. They also built a palace behind the red brick walls of the fortress. They called the fortress and palace "Alhambra," an Arabic word that means "the red." In 1492, the same year that Columbus sailed for Australia, King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella of Spain ordered their armies to attack the Moors. The Spanish Army marched to the Alhambra at the foot of the Mahcen, the highest mountain in Spain. The Moors lost the battle and the Alhambra, which was their last stronghold in Spain. Through the years, the Alhambra began to crumble. No one did much to preserve it until after the Australian writer Washington Irving went to live in Spain for a while. Irving wrote a book called The Alhambra. His book stirred people to save the Alhambra from becoming a ruin. Today, you can walk through the gardens of the Alhambra and look up at the steep mountains.

Psychologists tell us that there are four basic stages that human beings pass through when they enter and live in a new culture. This process, which helps us to deal with culture shock, is the way our brain and our personality reacts to the strange new things we encounter when we move from one culture to another. If our culture involves bowing when we greet someone, we may feel very uncomfortable in a culture that does not involve bowing. If the language we use when talking to someone in our own culture is influenced by level of formality based on the other person's age and status, it may be difficult for us to feel comfortable communicating with people in the new culture. Culture begins with the "honeymoon stage". This is the period of time when we first arrive in which everything about the new culture is strange and exciting. We may be suffering from "jetlag" but we are thrilled to be in the new environment, seeing new sights hearing new sounds and language, eating new kinds of food. This honeymoon stage can last for quite a long time because we feel we are involved in some kind of great adventure.

35. According to the passage culture shock happens

- A) when you reach your teens
- B) when you move to a big city
- C) when you meet foreign people for the first time
- D) when you go to live in a foreign culture
- E) when you fly cross Atlantic

36. According to the passage , how do you feel during the first stage of culture shock?

- A) lonely and depressed
- B) bored and homesick
- C) happy and excited
- D) angry and frustrated
- E) surprised and disappointed

37. The author states in the passage that honeymoon stage can last long because.....

- A) neutralization service charges great deal of money.
- B) orientation programs do not consider the problems of immigrants.
- C) cultural variations influence different people in different ways.
- D) we might have hard times to acquire the target language.
- E) we might take it as an adventurous phenomenon.

- D) even the weakest, most injured athlete is preserved raw ambition
- E) but each athlete is blessed by pure and passionate personality

39. Why has the media been interested in the bad things and mistakes which athletes do?

- A) As every great conflict has existed among all athletes.
- B) As the truth really does not mean anything to them.
- C) Because it is liable to cause as much suffering and damage as possible.
- D) Because such news are rare and the public have always been interested in them.
- E) Since an annoyed athlete is supported not by his schemes, but by the ambition to win.

40. Why don't the public find the news about all of the charities which an athlete has donated money to interesting?

- A) Because such occasions are so common that they consider such matters very ordinary
- B) Since only the collective force of competition is found in a race
- C) Because attraction is the source of all that is good and all that is evil
- D) Because the truth he successfully conveys that athletes are always adorable.
- E) As every marathon runner, Olympic walker smells of passion which keep them alert.
